Kevin Brand

Kevin Brand grew up in Austria, moved to Berlin at eighteen, and made the city his new home. He studied philosophy and art history and gathered experience both on stage and in front of the camera. Along the way he lived and worked in Barcelona and London. After his first leading role in the film "Isle of Amber", which screened in Cannes, he went on to play parts in television productions in Germany, Spain and Austria. Kevin has a remarkable feel for languages and dialects, which is why he is often cast in roles whose nationalities aren't his own. He's frequently asked to play the villain, but anyone who knows him personally would name comedy as his real strength. As ambitious and driven as he is on his acting path, he's just as easy-going, funny, and go-with-the-flow in private. He loves nature and sport, travels the world, writes songs, loves to paint and photograph — and has already had exhibitions in Berlin and Barcelona. Among all those interests, the greatest passion remains, and will always remain, acting: "There's still so much to discover!"
